GMS Language Services Announces New Global Contract with DeLaval International

PULLY, SWITZERLAND., Dec 15, 2008 – GMS Language Services®, a leading global language and communications services company, announced today that it has entered into an agreement with DeLaval International to provide an innovative language and communications services solution.

Under the terms of the agreement, GMS will provide DeLaval with a complete package of tailor-made, reality-based language and communications training and coaching services.

Around the world today, there are an estimated 1 Billion people learning English. Undoubtedly, English is the global language for doing business.

DeLaval's HR Development Manager, Karin Ersson Ekstam, motivated their decision; "GMS' focus on quality and their systematic and transparent method for following up on results has made them the best choice as our premier language services provider. The fact that they can provide language training at so many different levels, from practically beginners to advanced negotiators made them especially interesting for us. And even if this is a local Swedish agreement, it is also valuable to find a partner that can provide e-learning and possible local support in many countries as we have staff all around the world."

GMS's Managing Director of European Operations, Kathy Falk, commented that "Successful communication in business is more than just words! There's more to a language than grammar and vocabulary. DeLaval has clearly recognized that to communicate adequately and effectively across cultures, English is deemed to be of supreme importance in successful international business relations today."

With this agreement, GMS Language Services® continues as a global leader, always delivering "Best Value for Money".
